ALL 2

3 Grandpa always took Eric and me on the most fantastic adventures. This time we went to Africa.
"These new binoculars are for you," said Grandpa.
"Will we see a lot of wild animals?" asked Eric.
"Of course," said Grandpa.

POINT

Do you see anybody breaking the airport rules? What's he or she doing?

One in a Mara

The Maasai Mara National Park covers an area of 1,510 km^2 (around five Taipeis) in southwestern Kenya.

It's named after a famous local tribe, the Maasai. Their grassy landscapes are mostly spotted with trees, bushes, and animals. This is why the park is called "Mara," the Maasai's word for "spotted." In addition, this park is also home to more than 570 species of wild birds. All in all, it's the perfect place for anybody's first safari.
